Ministry won't fund 24-hour emergency service

Andrew Milne

The Minden Hospital emergency ward may or may not be open for 24 hours a day after Labour Day.

And if it's going to be open 24 hours, the health board is going to have to get creative — and quickly.

The board heard last week, in an as-yet unofficial communication from the Ministry of Health, that it would not be provided with funding it feels it would require to keep the hospital open 24 hours per day.

Provincial funding for the hospital is a complicated issue. Minden, and neighbouring Haliburton Hospital, are both currently run under the auspices of parent hospital St. Joseph's of Peterborough, and the funding for their operation comes out of St. Joseph's global allocation.

Budget numbers for the operation of the two hospitals have recently been hard to procure, but St. Joseph's does report that they ran at an approximate combined deficit of $300,000 in their last year of operation, probably primarily due to a doctor shortage in Minden and the cost of topping up doctor's salaries at the two hospitals. Total budget numbers are a more nebulous affair still, but one figure available for the two hospitals is a combined global budget of $2.8 million.

St. Joseph's has been operating Minden at reduced hours — 12 per day — since October, in part due to financial concerns — because Minden is in the throes of an acute doctor shortage, and has no local physicians available to staff the facility, meaning the hospital has to hire physicians from outside the area to keep the emergency ward running. Doing so has been expensive.

Minden's in-patient ward was closed — also due to the doctor shortage — in April of 1996.

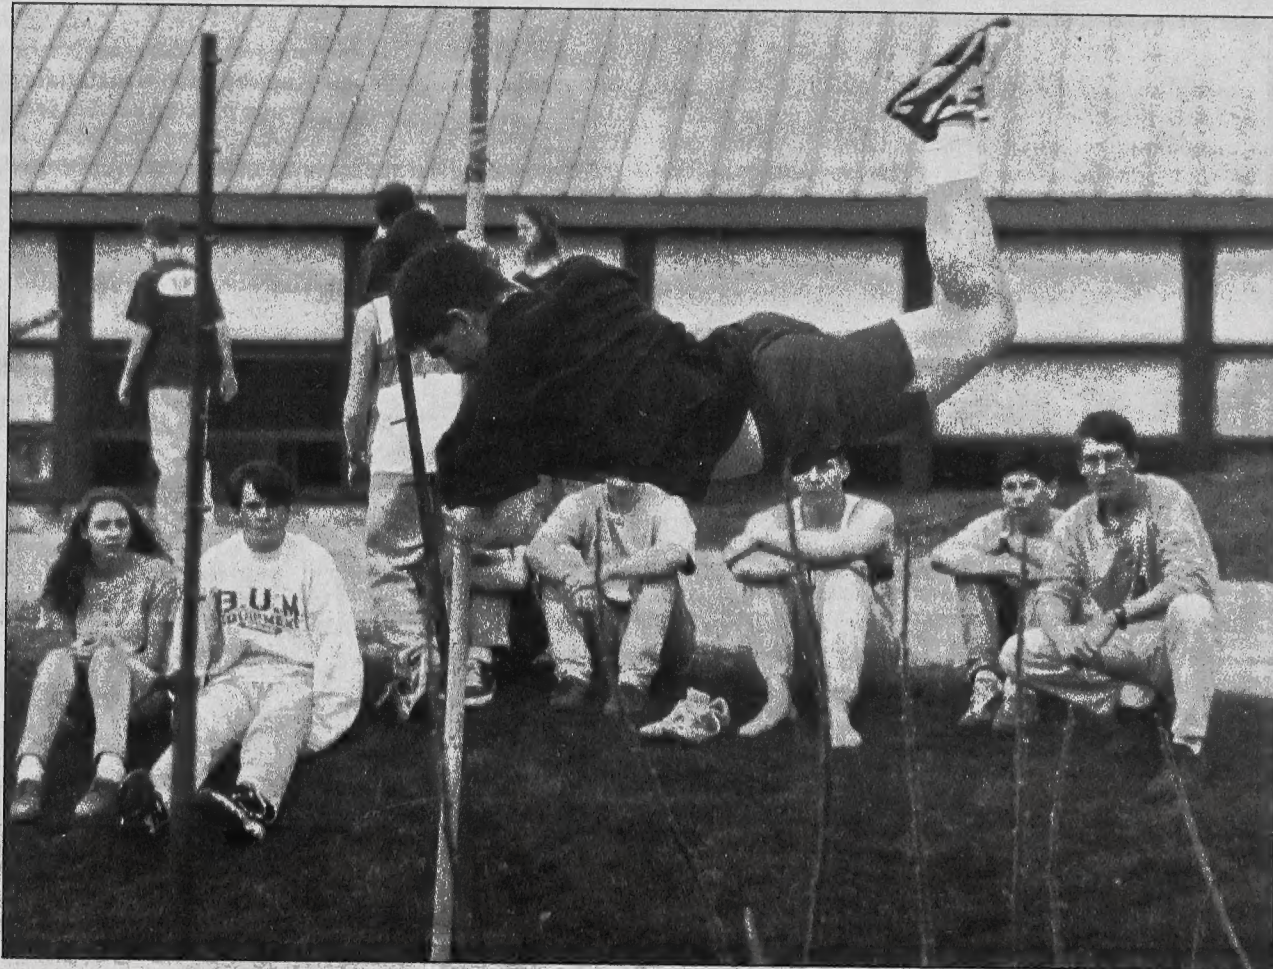

The two local hospitals are slated, however, to be transferred to the fledgling Haliburton Highlands Health Services board (formally incorporated only last week), and the board had been invited by the Ministry of Health (MOH) to write a proposed operational budget. The board chose to write a proposal calling for funding of 24 hour, 12 month emergency service in Minden, at least for the immediate future, based on the service delivery prior to the doctor shortage.

The MOH response however was that the government does not wish to fund a 24 hour service in Minden, and that funding levels will remain at what they are currently, which the board believes may be adequate for 24 hour service only during the summer, and 12 hours per day for the remaining eight months.

The emergency department and walk-in clinic will provide 24 hour a day service from this coming weekend to Labour Day therefore. What happens after Labour Day is harder to predict.

Haliburton Highlands Health Services executive director Foster Loucks, in announcing the news said

Children's services board

Frustrated by delays

Andrew Milne

A Haliburton County agency, planning for seven years now to take over as the local Children's Aid Society, is still waiting for the go-ahead to do so.

The group, meant to take over a variety of children's and family services from a number of separate responsible agencies and incorporate them under one roof, has been working on the amalgamation since 1989.

The hold-up is now at the Ministry of Community and Social Services (MCSS) level. The MCSS has yet to say conclusively that it will be granting the agency its Children's Aid Society designation. Worse yet, the ministry seems to be implying it's having misgivings about granting the designation.

The designation is necessary for Family Services to act as a CAS, and sets some very stringent requirements on the hiring of an executive director. Until it is certain of the designation, it can't hire one.

The MCSS hasn't stated specifically what the problem is. Project manager Frances Adams says she had heard that one concern of the ministry might be over the efficiency of such a small CAS, with such a small caseload, but none of this has been direct or official.

Family Services board president Cathy Reid described the situation as 'frustrating'.

Said Reid, "We had some really good momentum, and we still do have some momentum in trying to bring this about. We're all volunteers and we've spent a lot of time trying to make it happen in the most effective way possible. Our only hiccup has been the ministry dragging their feet."

Currently, the Kawartha CAS administers children's aid in the area, and has a satellite office in Haliburton.

Said Reid, "The difference in this is that children's services in Haliburton county will be controlled and directed by the community, for the community."

Another anticipated advantage of the amalgamated service, says Reid, is that having all the services under one roof would make things a lot easier for clients, who often use more than one related service, and would — ministry concerns aside — allow more efficient service delivery.

Reid said her foremost concern now is that the various agencies which have agreed to divest their share of the services to Family Services, might back out of the agreement if they begin to believe the project is no longer feasible.

Said Reid, "I think it's something that's important. I think the community wants this to happen. We want it to happen. And the longer it takes in coming about, the more difficult it makes it... And it's no question it's the child welfare designation on which the whole thing hinges. If we don't get the designation, it opens up the whole ball of wax again."

Reid said MPP Chris Hodgson's office has become involved, and has asked the MCSS to make a commitment on the issue.

More tipping fee questions

Len Nesbitt was back for his second visit to an Anson, Hindon and Minden council meeting last week to discuss tipping fees at the municipality's landfill sites.

Nesbitt asked council if tipping fees apply to everyone. He was assured that they do.

Using a scenario of the maximum five bags per household, Nesbitt said that 10 households would generate eight cubic yards of garbage and that the tipping fee would offset any profit he might realize by providing a garbage collection service.

Councillor Jerry Rome pointed out that very few households produce five bags of garbage per week. It was also explained that the recyclable materials and items that can be burned may be deposited at the landfill sites free of charge. If the recyclables are sorted, as they should be, the vast majority of households would have no more than one or two bags of garbage per week.

Nesbitt asked council if the projected profit from tipping fees had been calculated.

"The intent is not to make money," reeve Jeanne Anthon explained. "It is to encourage, and force people if necessary, to recycle."

"We're concerned about the long term effect," deputy-reeve Rome added. "It would cost millions of dollars to establish another dump site... if that's even possible."

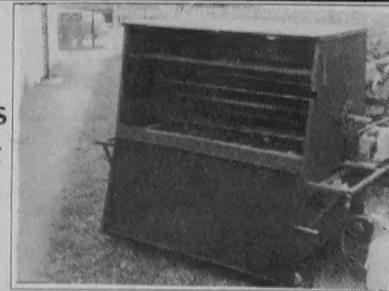

Councillor Sinc Nesbitt suggested that Len Nesbitt should consider just picking up recyclable materials if he doesn't think a general garbage pick-up service is viable.

"You would be the first to offer rural recycling," Anthon said. "It would be something to be proud of."

Len Nesbitt was reminded of the invitation extended at the April 11 meeting to sit in on an Environmental Committee meeting. He said he would try to attend.

HCBE office staff members take pay cut

Andrew Milne

Administration staff members in the board of education office have had their wages rolled back for the year.

The board has proposed to roll back staff wages board-wide by 2.2 percent for the September 1996 to August 1997 school year to absorb a $325,000 cut in provincial transfer payments.

So far, the office staff and the two unions representing elementary school teachers have agreed to the rollbacks.

Negotiations continue with secondary school teachers and educational assistants, custodians, and secretaries, represented by the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation (OSSTF) and the Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE) respectively. Both groups have however rejected initial offers incorporating the rollbacks.

All eight office staff members are full-time, non-unionized workers. Their wages vary between $25,000 and just over $100,000. Board office personnel at the bottom of the wage scale will earn around $500 less after the roll back.

Superintendent of education Brad Saunders said office staff was presented with a choice between having lay-offs, or a roll back, and they felt the roll back was preferable.

"I feel proud of the people in this office," said Saunders. "I think they've demonstrated a real commitment to try to save jobs in the schools."

Board negotiator Cheryl Murdoch expressed praise for the employees' decision.

"It makes the board's job a lot easier," said Murdoch. "I approached them, and they just said yes, we can."

Murdoch also said she believes the office staff is already lean, and the employees work more than the hours for which it is paid. "We're very fortunate to have these people," she said. "There's no two ways about it. They work way beyond their hours."

"As far as I'm concerned this office has been run lean and mean for a number of years, and we probably should have had more staff than we do. So to look at letting somebody go, it would put totally undue pressure on those that were left. Everyone in this office works very, very hard."

The office staff wages are around 4.5 percent of the board's payroll.

Murdoch says she hopes such measures will not be necessary again. She is not happy about the roll backs.

"We're looking down the road, hoping the government will be in a better position in the future, to treat us a little better."

"It's something you do to keep the system running. And it's something we do because we believe in the system."

Murdoch also said she expects the board will be lobbying the government through its board's association to protect the funding of education.

precipitate the difficulties we're facing here."

May 10, that he doesn't feel this has to mean Minden can't be kept open. It does, however, mean the board is going to have to get working quickly on innovations that would make it possible for this to happen.

Those innovations are one of the bones of contention here. The MOH's position regarding the service in Minden is that the acute care role study carried out by the HHHS in November of 1995, concluded that patient traffic cannot sustain 24 hour services in both Haliburton and Minden, and that therefore they do not wish to fund it.

However, the role study also made clear that for all residents of the county to be adequately covered for emergency service without 24 hour operation at both sites, certain other, rather innovative measures would have to be implemented. These include the use of paramedics and training of nursing staff to take over more advanced roles in emergency situations.

Naturally, for a newly formed board working in a climate of economic austerity, that's going to be a challenge.

Board Chair Paul Heffer said last week, "I think it would be fair to say there's some frustration on the part of the board that the ministry does not fully ap-

Incorporation

Funding difficulties aside, board members had some cause for jubilation last week. At their Friday meeting, with little ceremony, the board members signed the papers which make them the directors of the formally incorporated HHHS.

The HHHS will be a corporation without assets until it takes over ownership of the two hospitals — an event tentatively planned for the end of this month.

Nonetheless, board members seemed happy to see the papers signed and filed.

"That's it," said Heffer, smiling, as interim director Hugh Nichol penned the last signature to the papers that ratify the rest of the board as directors. "It's official."

The Board also made time for a few words of praise for former member Stuart Baker during the meeting. Baker, ill with cancer, has resigned from the board.

Said Heffer, "Stuart of course went through a time with the board that was very difficult, and he was very dedicated to the work of the board... Please keep him in your thoughts."

As the by-laws of the newly instituted corporation are satisfied by the 12 members remaining, Baker will not be replaced.

Accident still under OPP investigation

The OPP's investigation into an incident in which a father and his son were struck by a vehicle in downtown Minden continues.

Funeral director Barry Cray and son Alex were struck by a vehicle driven by Jim Walker of Minden April 26. Cray was raking the lawn adjacent to the Gordon A. Monk funeral home at the time, while Alex was riding his tricycle on the paved parking lot.

Barry spent several days in St. Michael's Hospital in Toronto suffering with a broken leg. He has since returned home and is on the mend. Alex was treated at Minden Hospital.

Investigating officer Terry Allore of the Minden OPP says officials from the Ministry of Transportation (MTO) examined the vehicle involved, and he will be meeting with them later this week.

Police sources told The Times, immediately following the accident, that they would be investigating the vehicle for mechanical defects, particularly with respect to the operation of the accelerator.

Telemarketing scams exposed at Phonebusters seminar

by Jerry Grozelle

Videos showing telemarketing fraud artists in action had the audience members shaking their heads in disbelief. The videos were part of a presentation at the Stanhope Firefighters' Hall Thursday evening by detective constable Gus LaForge of Project Phonebusters. The project is part of the anti-rackets branch of the Ontario Provincial Police.

During one of the two videos, an 80 year-old woman is reduced to tears as a telemarketer tells her that when she dies, she can leave a legacy for her children and grandchildren by buying into his scheme. When she tells him she doesn't have the money, the telemarketer tries to make her believe she is a pathetic, worthless old woman whose only hope of redemption is to "invest" in the scam he's trying to sell. She admits later in an interview that she seriously contemplated suicide.

LaForge said, after the video was shown, that he's convinced the tactics of some of the telemarketers has, in fact, led to suicide after the victims have been bilked of their life savings.

After LaForge's introduction, Minden OPP constable Ron Buchanan told the audience of about 40 people, that this type of telemarketing fraud is "one of the most horrendous, dirtiest, evil crimes there is." It preys on the most vulnerable and, in particular, the elderly.

"Watch your families and watch your friends to make sure they don't fall victim to one of these scams," he cautioned.

LaForge explained that 90 per cent of the telemarketing fraud schemes originate from Montreal.

"There are some in Toronto and some in Vancouver, too," he said.

Project Phonebusters is a national task force that was established in January of 1993. The project is operated with finances and human resources from the OPP, with co-operation from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Ontario Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, the Alberta Ministry of Housing and Municipal Affairs, the Canadian Bankers and Couriers Associations and Better Business Bureaus in Canada and the United States. The operation, with headquarters in North Bay, is run by two OPP officers, LaForge and Barry Elliot and nine civilians, with the assistance of five RCMP officers in Montreal, who make the arrests.

"The phone rings steady," LaForge said. "We get 150 calls a day at the office ... 6,608 from January until this morning," he said Thursday evening. In the past five months, 773 victims alone have called. "Those 773 victims have lost a total of $1,000,289," LaForge added.

And that's only the people who called to tell Phonebusters they have been victimized. LaForge said that only an estimated 18 per cent of those who fall prey to scam artists report their losses.

Phonebusters is making inroads, not so much in the area of arrests and convictions, but in intercepting the money that is being sent to the con artists and returning it to its rightful owners.

RCMP officers watch the mail boxes of the fraudulent companies and when mail arrives, it is seized and returned to the senders.

LaForge said that one package containing $10,500 was intercepted that morning and returned to a California resident.

"Almost a million dollars has been returned since January," he said.

The first arrest was made in February of 1993, a month after Phonebusters started. The offender was brought to Kingston, Ontario from Montreal to stand trial because Quebec laws "have no problem with these operations," LaForge said.

About half of the complaints come from Ontario. But the scam artists are continuing to branch out, making calls to the United States.

LaForge said U.S. authorities have taken a dim view of this type of crime. U.S. Secret Service and FBI agents have charged one Montreal telemarketing com-

Congregation celebrates Walford-Davis' 30 years in ministry

by Jerry Grozelle

Reverend Peter Walford-Davis may have had some suspicions when he saw some familiar faces in his congregation May 5 at the United Church in Minden. Those people weren't regular members of the Minden, Carnarvon or Maple Lake congregations he sees every Sunday.

Those people were from Milford, Consecon and Cobden.

After the service, Walford-Davis discovered why those people were in attendance when a surprise party in his honour was held in the church hall.

Andrew Walford-Davis was another face Peter hadn't expected to see that Sunday morning. He came to Minden from Brockville for the celebration. Peter has two sons, Stephen and Christopher, from a previous marriage, who were unable to attend.

May 5 marked 30 years in the ministry for Walford-Davis. He earned his Bachelor of Theology from Queen's University on May 5, 1966.

Born in Birmingham, England in 1934, he was 32 years old when he took his first charge (actually five parishes) at Consecon, Ontario (near Trenton).

Peter met his wife Barb at Trenton Memorial Hospital. He was visiting members of the congregation and she was a physiotherapist. They were married at the Consecon United Church on August 3, 1968. Six months later, in January of 1969, they moved to Cobden (in the Ottawa Valley).

The family increased by one in 1974 when their son Andrew was born. The following year the family moved to Port Elgin. After six years in Port Elgin, the Walford-Davis family moved to Milford, which is near Picton, where they stayed for 12 years.

Members of the local congregation will agree that Milford's loss was Minden and area's gain when the Walford-Davis family moved here in 1993. The Reverend's popularity was evident by the turnout at the May 5 anniversary party.

"We were very pleased," said Barb Walford-Davis. "There must have been close to 150 people at the surprise party."

Members of the three local charges packed the church hall. Fred Chapple of Carnarvon acted as master of ceremonies and Al Dorman from the Maple Lake congregation was in charge of the gift presentations.

Choirs from all three parishes entertained with songs fitting for the occasion.

Following the pot luck lunch, Walford-Davis was presented with two pieces for his model train set, a caricature by Minden artist Gil Parcell and a plaque commemorating his 30 year anniversary.

The Walford-Davis' initiation to Minden may have been a bad omen to some. But they took it in stride. Peter explained that they arrived in Minden before their furniture.

"We spent the first night sleeping on the floor... no mattress or anything," he said.

When the movers finally arrived the next morning, some angry bees near the side door forced them to move everything in through the front.

"Both of the movers were allergic to bee stings, so we had to move everything in through the front door," he recalled. "I'd say we got a really hot welcome."

The Walford Davis' aren't planning any more moves, they both agree that retirement will be the next career move.

30 YEARS IN MINISTRY: Barb Walford-Davis helps her husband Peter celebrate his 30th year as a United Church minister by assisting in the cutting of the anniversary cake.

SURPRISE PARTY: Reverend Peter Walford-Davis was presented with gifts and accolades after conducting his church service May 5. Seen here with the guest of honour (second from right) are Fred Chapple (left), Peter's wife Barb and Al Dorman (right).

CRRRRUNCH: They brought in the heavy artillery... er, equipment, to demolish this old building at the corner of Milne Street and Pritchard Lane in Minden. The municipality purchased the property recently with the intent of increasing downtown parking. The area which was occupied by the building will eventually be paved. The demolition was completed in one day by a crew from Tom Prentice Trucking.

79,000 white pine planted in Hindon

This spring, 79,000 3 year old white pine trees are being planted, under contract, on Crown land near Tingey Lake in Hindon Township. The Ministry of Natural resources (MNR) in Minden, in partnership with Northern Timberhouse Ltd., of Minden and Arbor International Inc., of Downsview, began the project on May 9th. This is the last step in a multi-phase procedure, to reforest a white pine and poplar cutover. The project began in 1992.

The effort is a true partnership, with the actual hand planting being done by Arbor, a Forestry contracting company. MNR is providing the planning, support and most of the funding.

Northern Timberhouse Ltd. contributed funding towards the project as an expression of their concern for the environment and for the replenishment of a tree species which they use in building their log structures.

Normally, planting would be well under way during National Forest Week (May 6th to 10th). However, the project has been plagued by problems, all related to this spring's unusually cold, wet weather.

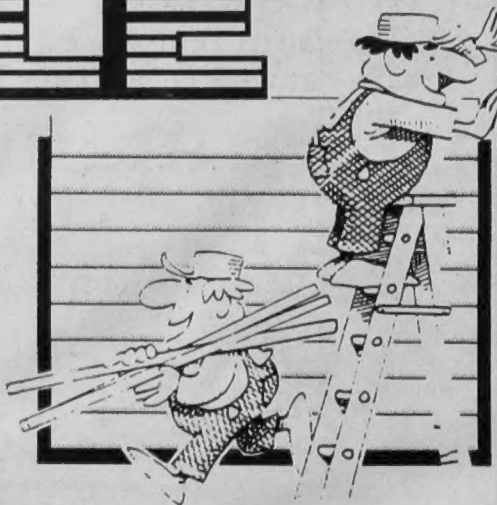

A lot of work has gone into preparing this site for replanting. The result will be beneficial to all when the seedlings become mature, majestic and very valuable white pine trees.

An announcement this week from the Haliburton Health Services Board that the emergency department at the Minden Hospital will now be open 24 hours a day will be greeted with a sigh of relief by the community. For the past eight months the Minden Hospital emergency department has been operating under restricted hours, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. That sense of relief, however, was tempered by the indications that the round-the-clock service may not extend beyond Labour Day.

In responding to the health board's budget, submitted last month, which called for 24 emergency service at both Minden and Haliburton hospitals, the Ministry of Health has indicated, informally, that funds may not be available to support that position. While the extended hours will relieve concerns about the dramatic increase in population this area absorbs during the summer months, it is scant comfort to those who live here year round or who are considering retirement in the community.

There is no question the availability of a 24 hour emergency service is an important factor when people decide where they wish to live. During the turmoil of the past year, more than a few people, many of them in their retirement years, have left the area because of the uncertainty of services at the Minden Hospital. Many others have identified that as their primary concern.

Ontario Premier Mike Harris, the Minister of Health Jim Wilson and Victoria-Haliburton MPP Chris Hodgson have all stated that rural emergency service is a vital part of the provincial health care system. They have backed those words with financial support for off-hours doctor coverage. What seems to have been over-looked in this plan is the fact that doctors need an emergency department in which to deliver those services. If the current provincial government is serious about ensuring rural Ontario has access to adequate emergency coverage, it must realize that while there are doctors readily available to deliver those services, they need the facility in which to do so. The health of individuals, and indeed the community, is depending on that message getting through.

From sacred cows to cannon fodder

Editor:

I read with interest and amusement the article referring to the 2.2% cut to Teachers' Salaries. The Spokesperson, Chris Lind suggested a $1000 reduction would be a hardship for people earning $50,000 per year.

Probably 75% of Haliburton County would love to earn that amount of money in one year, so I am afraid there is no sympathy from this reader.

It is so strange that all the things the Taxpayers Coalition harped about for so long are all coming to pass, even the sacred cows that "couldn't be touched" are now cannon fodder for the budget battle.

But guess what, we haven't seen anything yet.

It is inevitable that public servants' wages will match those in the private sector. I want everyone to know that I admire professionals in whatever business they are in, but in the case of teachers and other public servants, business is business, and if there is not enough value for the money, the customers, (the public) will just stop paying.

The magic figure seems to be 30% reduction that both federal and provincial governments estimate needs to be for everyone to take a cut in pay so that everyone can still have a job. The teachers union tendency would be to lay off members and complain. Well, I and others like myself predicted it would come to this. I can't wait to see what happens next!!

Ottawa abuzz with Reform machinations

by John O'Reilly, Victoria/Haliburton MP

Ottawa has been buzzing with a lot of controversy for many Members of Parliament. I want to inform the constituents of Victoria-Haliburton of the headline political news in the past couple of weeks.

There are a number of issues to discuss; from Bill C-33 including sexual orientation to the Human Rights Code to the resignation of the Deputy Prime Minister, Sheila Copps, and many others.

The whirlwind last couple of weeks ended with a crucial vote on the second reading of Bill C-33, which concerns sexual orientation. I have polled the riding and received numerous phone calls with constituents views on this bill. I respected how the people felt and voted against this bill in Parliament. Although the vote passed by an easy margin (178-53), I feel that I spoke for a large percentage of the people in Victoria-Haliburton when I voted against this bill. Twenty-three Reform MPs decided not to vote, and both Progressive Conservative members did not vote on this bill as well. Had these people voted, the vote would have been much closer. Especially since the Reform party was against this bill. Why did half of the Reformers not vote? Why didn't Preston Manning vote on such a critical issue? The bill now heads to committee where it will go under review before being brought back for a final, third-reading vote.

Sheila Copps has made a principled decision by seeking the confidence of the people in Hamilton-East at a by-election June 17, 1996. This is her decision. No one in our party asked for her resignation. We look forward to her return to Cabinet, as we are fully confident that she will be re-elected in Hamilton-East. Ms. Copps made a mistake in overstepping our Red Book commitment and is seeking the confidence of her voters to determine her political future.

Bob Ringma, a Reform party member recently made comments that were considered by some to be bigoted and racist. Mr. Ringma resigned his position as party whip as a result. Why didn't Preston Manning and Deborah Grey immediately condemn Mr. Ringma's outrageous remarks? The reporter interviewing Mr. Ringma gave him several opportunities to clarify or retract his position, but Mr. Ringma made his views crystal clear, in a very empathic manner.

John Nunziata did much more than vote against the budget -- he voted to defeat his own government. A budget motion is an automatic vote of confidence for the government. Joe Clark's government was defeated in a non-confidence budget vote in 1979. However he tried to rationalize it, John Nunziata voted to defeat his own government. We have fulfilled our Red Book commitment as stated. "We will replace the GST with a system that generates equivalent revenues, is fairer to consumers and to small business, and promotes federal-provincial fiscal co-operation and harmonization." The "Red Book" was our party's platform and we stand by it. Mr. Nunziata may have gone above these statements but that was his decision, similarly with Ms. Copps.

The Government is determined to get to the bottom of the Somalia inquiry. Mr. Collette, Minister of National Defence and Veteran's Affairs and the rest of the Liberal party are confident that the process we have established will do just that. We are determined that justice will prevail. The Commission has a broad mandate that will allow it to discover just what happened with respect to the Somalia mission. The Reform party demanded that the government launch an inquiry into the Somalia mission and now it wants the government to dissolve the Commission before its work is completed. Does the Reform party want to uncover the truth or does it only want to score political points?

These events brought to an end two interesting weeks in the House of Commons. As always, your comments and suggestions are welcome.

Table with a view

Give me a hug, you big architeuthis

There is no new thing under the sun.

Ecclesiastes 1:9

Well, perhaps not new, but there are some uncommonly strange and unlikely critters out there that, despite our scientific sophistication, we still haven't laid eyes on.

Never mind the sasquatch and the abominable snowman. Forget about UFO's and quirks and quarks.

How about architeuthis?

His common name is "giant squid" and the simple fact is, even though marine biologists and fishermen know he's down there somewhere, no one has ever seen a giant squid in his natural habitat.

Oh, we've seen squid, alright. All kinds of squid. Newfoundlanders jig for them. I can go down to a favourite Spanish restaurant and order up a dish of calamares any time I want. But neither the Newfoundlanders nor I will be tucking into a dish of giant squid.

Squid of any size are never going to win a beauty contest. They are, at least to the conventional human eye, an apparition right out of your worst nightmare. There is for starters, those huge unblinking eyes and a corolla of undulating sucker-pocked tentacles surrounding a parrot like beak. The thought of such a creature pulsing silently through the depths and as big as a railway car is enough to give anybody the cold sweats.

Giant squid are something else again. They spend their lives in the dark depths of the ocean. They never get within a half a mile of the surface unless they're sick or dying.

And they're big. More than 2000 years ago the Roman naturalist Pliny described one with arms "knotted like clubs", with a head as big as a wine cask. A medieval Swedish observer wrote of "monstrous fish" of "horrible forms with huge eyes ... One of these Sea-Monsters will drown easily many great ships provided with many strong Mariners."

Several famous novelists have used the giant squid to great dramatic advantage. In Moby Dick, Herman Melville waxed apocalyptic about a "vast pulpy mass, furlongs in length ... long arms radiating from its centre and curling and twisting like a nest of anacondas." In 20 000 Leagues Under The Sea, author Jules Verne invented a squid so huge it wrapped the submarine Nautilus in its embrace. Even as I speak, there's a movie making the rounds called Beast, the character of which is a 100-foot-long architeuthis.

Literary flights of imagination? No doubt. But there have been bits and pieces of giant squid washed up, snagged in deep sea fishing nets and found in the guts of sperm whales to make it clear there's something mighty big swimming around down there. In 1861, a French corvette actually did battle with a 25-foot squid off the Canary Islands.

Crew members attacked the squid with a hail of rifle fire and cannon balls. They tried to haul it aboard but the skipper chickened out and cut it loose "lest the creature damage or injure the ship and the crew."

The largest specimen ever measured was found on a beach in New Zealand in the late 1800's. It weighed about a ton and was just slightly longer than your average Greyhound bus.

So ... is there any chance that there are some really, really giant squid down there — bigger than anything we've ever seen?

Doctor Clyde Roper thinks so. He's a marine biologist and curator of an exhibit called In Search of Giant Squid, currently on display at the Smithsonian National Museum of Natural History in Washington. This fall, Dr. Roper hopes to head for the squid jigging grounds off New Zealand, fold himself into a deep-diving submersible and become the first human being in history to observe — and film — the giant squid in its natural habitat. Roper believes there's a very good chance he'll find "massive, unbelievable animals" up to 75 feet long.

Fictional flights of fancy aside, is Dr. Roper likely to be in any danger down there, surrounded by squid? Well, there was that photographer taking shots of squid underwater off the California coast a few years back who was attacked by a hive of swarming squid. They actually began to pull him down until he had the presence of mind to use air bubbles from his regulator to "hose" them off his body. The diver came out of it with what Roper describes as "giant hickeys all over his skin."

And those were just little squid. No more than a hundredth the size of architeuthis.

HCDC offers unique training courses

by Jerry Grozelle

The Community Economic Development Committee of the Haliburton County Development Corporation (HCDC) is offering a unique opportunity for area people to learn about community economic development, leadership and strategic planning.

Training sessions will be held on three consecutive Monday evenings starting on May 27 at the Wigamog Inn. Each session will run for three hours, from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Dr. Christopher Bryant, a former member of the faculty of the University of Waterloo, where he served for six years as director of the Economic Development Program, will be conducting the seminars. Bryant is currently with the University of Montreal. He has extensive knowledge in the field of economic development, specializing in economic and urban development from a regional perspective, rural and agricultural development, and sustainable community development, especially from a community economic perspective. While he was director of Waterloo's Economic Development Program, Bryant co-ordinated one of the core courses for several years and personally delivered many specialized seminars and workshops.

Since 1988, Bryant has operated Econotrends Limited, an Ontario-registered consulting firm. The impressive list of qualifications is international in scope, with active research programs in western Europe as well as Canada.

Objectives

The workshops will feature a different topic each evening.

The May 27 session will be on Community Economic Development. The objective of this workshop will be to provide the board members of the participating agencies and associations with an understanding of the basic principles of Community Economic Development (CED) and demonstrate how they can be applied within Haliburton County.

Participants will evaluate the conditions for successful CED in the county.

When this session is completed, participants will have the knowledge to communicate what they have learned to others within their agencies or organizations, as well as the community. They will also be able to identify the key interests which should be involved in CED in Haliburton County and begin to identify how they can be mobilized.

Session two, on June 3, will focus on Leadership.

This workshop's objective is to provide the tools to help participants assess the leadership roles of their own agencies and associations, within the context of developing effective ways of working together to further the development of the county.

A set of simple, yet effective tools will help participants to assess the type of leadership role their particular organization can use to contribute to the future of the county, using a "road map" approach to the development of their own agencies as well as the county as a whole. They will also have an understanding of why leadership is compatible with a decentralized approach to CED.

Strategic Planning will be the topic of the June 10 workshop.

Participants will learn how to make strategic planning work and how to avoid the pitfalls. They will also evaluate the roles of their own agencies or association in terms of strategic planning. By the end of this session, participants will have an understanding of why county planning is different from planning for the private sector. Links between planning and action will also be discussed.

Active participation, small group discussions and small group workshops will be used in the learning process.

Bryan Brown, co-ordinator of the Community Economic Development Corporation section of the Haliburton County Development, organized the training sessions.

"It's for people involved in government, any groups going through restructuring or strategic planning, service groups, board of education personnel, kids groups or even the health services board," Brown said. "It will give people the exposure and experience to take all the questions

Rosemary Swift stands in the door of The Art-Affect Gallery, a business she purchased earlier this year with her son Stewart and daughter-in-law Faye. Rosemary is familiar to downtown Minden shoppers because she managed the same business, under the name The Art Gallery. The shop, adjacent to the CIBC, features an interesting selection of original art and reproductions. Frames and framing services are also available. During the recent ownership transition, Rosemary noted that the community was very encouraging, a fact she appreciated as she began this new venture.

The cost of each workshop is $5, or $10 for all three. Brown said he was able to keep the cost down because a substantial grant was procured from Human Resources Development Canada. Participation is limited to 50 people per session.

"The timing is particularly valuable because of the county restructuring discussions and the county's commitment to producing a strategic plan once restructuring is complete," Brown said.

Leslie Tashlin headed for Atlanta

by Jerry Grozelle

In a sport where hundredths of a second can mean the difference between winning and mediocrity, Lesley Tashlin is making her mark.

The 27 year-old is coming on strong at an age when most track and field athletes are thinking retirement.

Tashlin will be representing Canada in the 100-metre hurdles at the Olympic Games in Atlanta this summer.

A native of Haliburton, Tashlin is currently in training for the Olympics in Baton Rouge, Louisiana -- at Louisiana State University (LSU).

"Connections through other athletes," was Tashlin's explanation of how she ended up at the LSU training facility. She said that some athletes from the Ottawa club, where she trained, have used the facilities at LSU.

Tashlin was a sensation in the track events during her years at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School. She has had the Olympics in the back of her mind since high school, but she has never been more focused on that goal than she is now. She finished sixth in the 100-metre hurdles at the Commonwealth Games in British Columbia in 1994. She also placed sixth at the Pan-Am Games the following year in Argentina. In 1994 she placed second at the Nationals and last year she was first. Encouraged by those successes, she has continued to improve her times, breaking the 13 second mark (12.97) for the first time at a recent competition. A time of 13.04 at a meet in Baton Rouge on March 30 easily beat the Olympic standard for the women's 100-metre hurdles and qualified her for the Olympic competition in Atlanta. The "A" standard is 13.14 and the "A-plus" standard is 13.06.

With the temperature ranging in the high 80s and low 90s Fahrenheit in Louisiana, training at LSU also has the benefit of acclimatizing Tashlin to the same type of temperatures that she can expect in Atlanta.

"By the time I get off the track, I'm beat," she said.

Along with the practice on the track, Tashlin keeps fit with weight training.

Craig Taylor is Tashlin's coach. She moved to Ottawa in 1992 to train with him. And when he moved to Calgary, she went with him. Taylor seems to be bringing out the best in her.

Tashlin trains as many as six or seven days a week, an average of three to four hours per day. Training sessions are cut shorter on days before competitions.

Tashlin has a competition coming up soon at LSU and she has entered one at Georgia State.

She says the other Canadian athletes who are training at LSU, as well as the coaches and athletes from the university, are very helpful.

The Canadian Olympic trials will be (more on page 17)

FIRST PLACE X 2: Jesse Sternberg crossed the finish line first in the 100m and 200m races of the midget boys division. He is seen here leading the pack across the line in the 200m event.

19 records fall at HHSS track meet

The annual HHSS track and field school meet took place last Thursday, and was without a doubt, it was a day to remember. A total of 19 records were broken, six by the men and 13 by the women, showing that HHSS is indeed very competitive on this year's track circuit. The midget girls 100 metre, 200 metre, 400 metre, 80 metre sprint hurdles and 300 metre distance hurdles records (some of which were formerly held by this year's Olympian Leslie Tashlin) were all broken by Kate Campbell, with the 800m, 1500m, and 3000m records falling to Stephanie Ratz.

In the midget boys division, Jesse Sternberg took the triple jump record and Aidan McKnight, the hurdles records. Caitlin Petit established a new junior girls 3000m record, and Mike Bradely broke the junior boys 100m and 200m records. Anna Tomlinson broke four records, in the senior girls discus, long jump, triple jump, and distance hurdles, and a 20 year-old record in senior boys distance hurdles finally fell to Travis Willison.

Russel Snodden also participated in the first-ever special needs 100m, and received by far the loudest cheers from the crowd.

The team and coaches expressed appreciation all the volunteers who helped with the organization, especially Mr. Roberts and the custodial staff, Mrs. Pizzey, Jamie Keefer, and Chris Greenfield for all their time and efforts. Best wishes go with these and the many other fine athletes who qualified (the top three in each event) the best of luck at the Kawartha meet in Lindsay this Thursday, May 16. The rest of the results are as follows.

Midget Girls

100m: Kate Campbell 13.2s (record); Amy Brandon 14.1s; Meaghan Kennedy 14.3s; Reagan Brown 15.1s;

200m: Kate Campbell 28.3s (record); Amy Brandon 30.6s; Meaghan Kennedy 31.9s; Reagan Brown 33.1s; Amy Pergolas 33.2;

held in Montreal from June 20 to 23

Heats for the Olympic women's 100-metre hurdles will start on July 29, followed by the quarter-finals. The semi-finals and finals will take place on July 31.

"If I'm lucky, I'll run in all four" Tashlin said.

In the meantime, Tashlin will be working at shaving a few more hundredths of a second off her times. After the trials in Montreal, she hopes to go to Europe for some competitions prior to the Olympics. She also plans to compete in the Canadian Nationals in Kitchener, starting on August 8. If all goes according to plan, she will go back to Europe for more competitions in September.

Legion to sponsor affordable housing study

The Royal Canadian Legion Branch 636, Minden has extended an invitation to Anson, Hindon and Minden council members to attend a presentation regarding the possible development of an affordable housing complex. The Legion is exploring the possibility of sponsoring such a project in and requires to have a feasibility study done.

A firm of architects approached the Legion with a proposal to develop an affordable housing project geared to seniors. A special grant is available from Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

If the feasibility study indicates that such a project is viable, the architects would proceed with the construction and sale of the units and a management organization would be formed for the on-going operation.

The architectural firm will make a presentation to Legion members and invited guests at 7 p.m. on Wednesday, July 3, prior to the Branch 636 general meeting.

Insurance costs explained

The high cost of insurance premiums is a concern of Anson, Hindon and Minden council. In an effort to determine the justification for the high premiums, representatives of Jardine OME Ltd. Insurance Brokers, one of only two companies that provides insurance for municipalities, attended Thursday's meeting to explain the fee structure.

Jardine president Chris Sinardo and vice-president Paul Dorman explained the causes for the increases and possible ways of reducing the costs. They also explained the coverage page by page.

Dorman said that the number and amount of claims is a major factor affecting premium costs. He pointed out that underwriters are happy to pay small claims in order to justify increasing premiums.

The Jardine proposal suggests that the municipality follow the lead of others and increase the amount of its deductible. In Anson, Hindon and Minden's case, the suggested amount is $2,500. This amounts to a form of "self-insurance", whereby the municipality would pay any claims of $2,500 or less out of its own coffers.

"Eighty-two per cent of municipal insurance claims are less than $5,000," Dorman said. "The goal is to reduce the number of claims through risk management and self-insurance."

Councillor Daryl Moore questioned whether the cost of self-insurance was more than the savings in premiums.

Dorman said that a risk management report would help to determine where the losses have occurred over the past six years. By studying the cause and the departmental areas where most claims are generated, it is possible to reduce the number of claims by as much as 50 per cent. He said that Australia has been using the system with a 50 per cent reduction in losses, which in turn, decreased premium costs. Sinardo added that the system is also working in Alberta.

Members' show features new talent

The Agnes Jamieson Gallery is now featuring its annual members' show.

The gallery is run by a collective of local artists and artisans. The show, which includes submissions from 27 members, is on display until May 18.

Works displayed range from paintings, drawings and similar media, through Japanese embroidery, to stained glass pieces, and wooden models.

Most of the works are available for sale.

During the members' show, the public is invited to vote for a favourite work. At the end of the show, the votes are tallied and a winner is announced for each category.

Gallery curator Ruth Amos says the show this year is interesting for a number of reasons.

"We have a few people showing this year for the first time," says Amos. "And there's a good variety of material."

Among the new artists this year are Sharon Hall, a Minden-based artist displaying pastel illustrations, and Shirley Gibson, a Bracebridge artist working in Japanese embroidery.

Gibson's work has been shown in this area before, though never in the Agnes Jamieson Gallery's members' show.

Two works by John Lennard, a renowned Minden-based painter working in oil, are also on display in the show.

The Agnes Jamieson Gallery, located on Bobcaygeon Road north at Parkside, can be reached at 286-3763. Gallery hours for May are Tuesday to Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

pany with 50 counts of money laundering. Conviction on those charges could net the accused 10 to 20 years in a U.S. penitentiary. In addition, restitution of more than $1-million must be made, and if the convicted felon is unable to pay up, he could remain behind bars indefinitely.

In Ontario, conviction on charges of telephone fraud haven't proven very effective. One man from Thunder bay was ripped off for $200,000. The scam artist was convicted and sentenced to three months in jail. "That wasn't much comfort to the man who lost $200,000," LaForge admitted.

With that in mind, LaForge said that the most effective method of combatting this type of crime is to educate people so they won't fall victim in the first place.

Television programs such as Marketplace, W5 and numerous talk shows have dedicated air time to the subject of telemarketing fraud.

One member of Thursday's audience said she had received a call telling her that she had won several thousand dollars. She was told she would have to send $1,000 to process her winnings.

"When I refused, the caller got very abusive," she said. "I can see how people can be intimidated."

LaForge said that one of the lists the scam artists treasure the most is Alzheimers victims.

Con artists have several ways of obtaining the so called "sucker lists." They are sold back and forth between different telemarketing companies, each pitching a different scam. Some even set up booths at such events as home shows, boat shows or other similar events. People are asked to fill out a ballot to win a prize. But all they get for their effort is their name, address and telephone number on a sucker list. Everybody who fills out one of those ballots is called and given the pitch that they have won. All they have to do is send a certified cheque, usually several hundred dollars (sometimes thousands) to receive their prize.

Telephone scams have evolved through a number of twists and turns, all with appealing, even plausible, pitches. In the end, however, the "winner" is victimized and all or most of the money they submit is lost. It is believed that the scams originated with pitches involving cars. The caller informed the intended victim that he or she had won a car and money was requested prior to delivery. Taxes, shipping and/or insurance were the reasons given for the "winner" to send money.

Then the pitch changed to cash. The scam artists told the "winner" that he or she must send money, before the prize could be released. The cash was required to pay a "gift tax".

Next was the cheap gift pitch. Callers informed the potential victims that they had won one or more prizes, usually the grand prize. The intended victim is told that he or she must purchase a product from the company to qualify for the prize.

"Of course, there never was any grand prize," LaForge said, adding that the product, for which the respondent usually paid as much as several hundred dollars, was never worth more than a few dollars.

Pitches like this are set up by a phoney contest mail-out. The information supplied by the respondents is added to a sucker list.

Hang up

LaForge said the best way to deal with the phone hustlers is to hang up as soon as they ask for a credit card number, a bank account number or money to claim a prize.

"Never pay anything for what's supposed to be a free prize," LaForge emphasized. "These people are vicious. They're cruel. They don't care about you. They care about themselves. They drive BMWs and Porsches."

The employees who actually make the calls, the telemarketers, typically make about 30 per cent of what they bring in.

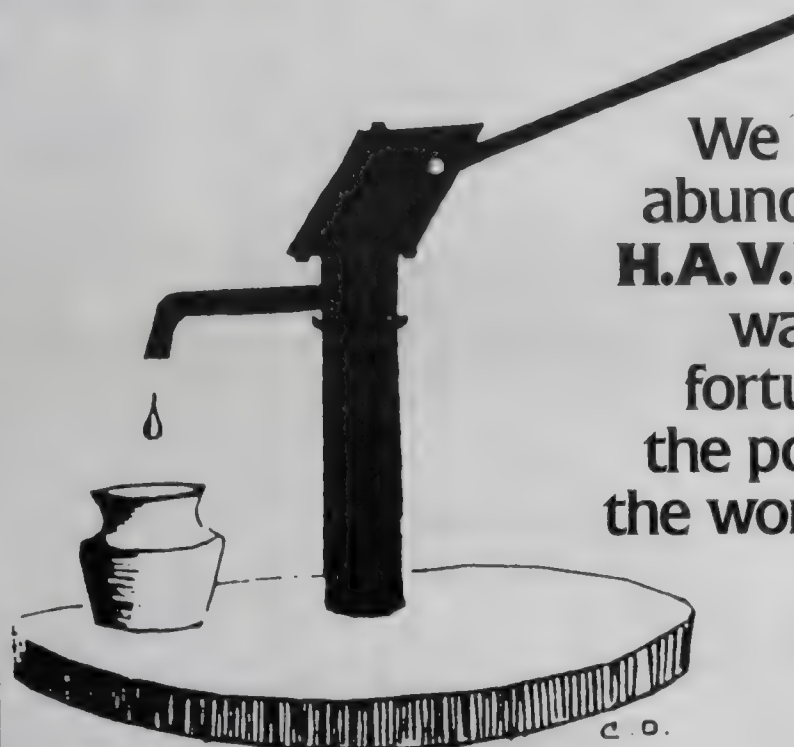

One McGill University student made an average of $1,000 per day with his pitch.

Calling some 1-900 numbers will result in your name going onto a sucker list. An invitation to call a 1-900 number to claim a prize usually results in a charge that far exceeds the amount of the prize.

"After eight minutes on the phone, you get $40

Never give out bank or credit card information to callers charged to your phone bill to win $1.37," LaForge said. He added that a call to Bell Canada complaining of such fraud will often result in a credit for the amount.

Con artists will use any ploy to separate people from their money. They will appeal to a person's sense of charity. As an example, two days after the bombing of the Federal Building in Oklahoma City, a scam was set up requesting donations for the families of the bombing victims. The chief beneficiary of that scam was the company which solicited the funds, not the bombing victims' families.

LaForge cautioned the audience to beware of telephone solicitations for donations. If there is any doubt, he advises you to phone the charity named by the caller and ask if it has a telephone campaign in progress in your area. He said that the safest way to contribute to a charity is directly. Even legitimate telephone solicitation of donations sees some of your donation going to the telemarketers.

What can be done if you are a victim of a credit card scam? LaForge suggests contacting your bank and asking about its "charge back policy." A complaint that your credit card was used fraudulently could result in getting your money back.

The coup de gras of scams is the "recovery pitch." That's where a victim who has been bilked for a large sum of money receives a call from someone who says his or her money has been recovered. These calls sometimes come from Jamaica or Costa Rica. The caller says the victim's money is safely in a bank and that it will be returned when a sum of money, usually a percentage of the total loss, is sent to the caller to process the delivery of funds. The desperate victim often hocks what little he or she has left, or borrows from relatives and friends, only to suffer yet another loss.

The biggest single loss in Canada, that Phonebusters is aware of, is $650,000, which was extracted from the victim over a 10 month period.

A Phonebusters pamphlet offers the following tips:

- Don't believe that everyone calling with an exciting promotion or investment opportunity is trustworthy, especially if you do not know the company
- Don't be fooled by a promise of a valuable prize in return for a low cost purchase.
- Don't disclose information about your bank account or credit card, not even a credit card expiry date.

■ Don't be pressured into sending money to take advantage of a "deal."

■ Don't be afraid to hang up the phone.

■ Don't purchase or invest without carefully checking the product, the investment and the company. Don't be afraid to request further documentation from the caller so you can verify the validity of his or her company.

■ Do get in touch with Phonebusters if you are contacted by someone who promises great prizes, but you are required to send money in advance for shipping, handling, taxes, etc., or you must purchase a product to qualify.

Phonebusters can be contacted by telephone at 705-495-8501, by fax at 705-494-4008, or by mail at Box 686, North Bay, ON, P1B 3B9.

Lifestyle Lessons

Story, photos by Andrew Milne

Caitlin Pettit stands in a young plantation of white pine, a group of grade five students from Archie Stouffer Elementary School (ASES) in Minden around her. She's explaining why the trees are planted the way they are — rows of alternating scotch pine and white pine, regularly spaced, towering over her.

Later, the students will place pegs in a pegboard in alternating rows, a simple lesson intended to drive the point home — the point being that white pine by their nature will tend to spread out rather than grow upwards, becoming bushy and less commercially valuable, without another species, such as scotch pine, present.

In the parlance of botany, white pine have poor apical dominance. With the scotch pine present to compete however, the white pine will push upwards, competing for the light, growing tall and straight.

The students nod. After this lesson, they'll move along the trail to the next lesson, led by trail leader Kevin Brezina, another high school student, and one of the co-ordinators of the project.

This classroom in a forest is a small part of the

COORDINATOR DAVE MOWAT, IN THE SCOTCH PINE/WHITE PINE PLANTATION — AN IMAGINATIVE PIECE OF MULTIDISCIPLINARY LEARNING.

ELM (Energy, Lifestyles, Matter) Project, an innovative piece of multidisciplinary teaching and learning dreamed up high school Biology teacher David Mowat.

In ELM, high school students from a range of programs prepare lessons and course materials themselves, and go into the forest to teach them to younger students from elementary schools across the county.

The way it runs now, says Mowat, it's becoming a community project, drawing on resources from throughout the school system and throughout the highlands. Mowat functions as a coordinator, but much of the raw material with which the students work comes from the community. And the ideas and energy that drive the course come from the students, with other teachers often lending expertise.

This year, the third year for ELM, students from the schools in Cardiff, Gooderham, Minden and Haliburton are coming to the high school to learn from high school students in programs as diverse as English, the dramatic arts, and biology.

The focus of ELM, broadly stated, says Mowat, is "ecology, but more than ecology — it's about ecology and about man's place in the natural world, man as a user and a manager, and how does man be wise in his environment."

Drama teacher Anne Varty, whose grade eleven drama students prepare some of the material, says the program is valuable for her students as well.

"Over three years," says Varty, "every group has taken a turn at it, and changed and developed the characters, and some of them go in different directions. I'm pleased that we don't carry the scripts year to year. Students get their own background information, and they add their own touch to it.

"They're actually doing everything they would do if they were putting on a formal stage production. They're doing the props and the blocking and the script writing and character development, but there's not that audience. They're performing, but they're performing for small groups, and the outdoor venue seems to make it easier for them to get comfortable."

There's a unique ambience in the forest. Bands of elementary school students — each shepherded by two high school age 'trail leaders' and a parent chaperon — make their way through the trails. Colourful props dot the landscape, and a convincing painted silhouette of a black bear ambles across a distant hill.

The lessons happen everywhere, and they might be on anything.

On one hill, a massive stump has overturned, its root system bared to the elements by the force of the wind. Next to it, there's a play — in which the young students read parts — on the role of wind disturbance in forest ecology.

OAC English student Carol Mowat hands out scripts. Jill Scott, Bronwen Winsley and Laura Domingues help the ASES students prepare. Trail leader Kevin Cripps helps ASES student Larry Reynolds, who has travelled here in an all-terrain wheelchair, with his part.

Mowat points proudly. Reynold's participation, he says, is a shining example of how a community can work to make sure everyone is included. The chair came from the family of the late Timothy Heming, an Ontario citizen of the year who recently died of spina bifida. Cripps worked on the trail system to make it navigable, and practised with Reynolds beforehand. Then he and fellow student Josh Burk did the muscle work of propelling the chair through the forest.

"So Larry is completely a part of this," says Mowat, "as much as is anyone here. And when the community and these students put their heads together, there's no reason he can't be."

A few hills over, Jeremy Scheffee stands beneath the 'grandfather tree', a mature spruce, and talks with his young charges about the years this tree has been here, what it has seen, and the effects it has had on the local ecology. The activity will be a scavenger hunt through the forest for the objects on the forest floor whose presence is influenced by the presence of the spruce.

A little farther on, Joni Eriksen is talking about wolves, their behaviour, their social structure. The students select an 'alpha cub' from their midst and act as a snarling, yelping group of wolf cubs.

Says Mowat, "There's a trend in education towards equality, inclusiveness — we're all created equal and so on. Well, in the wild it isn't always like that, and wolves aren't like that... There is an 'alpha cub' in each brood which is always first to get the food, first in everything... So the students pick the 'alpha cub' from their midst and they work with that throughout the exercise. They don't go anywhere until the alpha cub does, don't do anything until the alpha cub does."

The idea for ELM first came to Mowat during a board environmental action committee meeting four years ago. From there he took it to Irv Sternberg's business class, which helped the program prepare a business plan.

"The students," says Mowat, "are serving what they see as a worthwhile way to get educated. They're doing something useful. And the impact they have on elementary school kids is truly phenomenal."

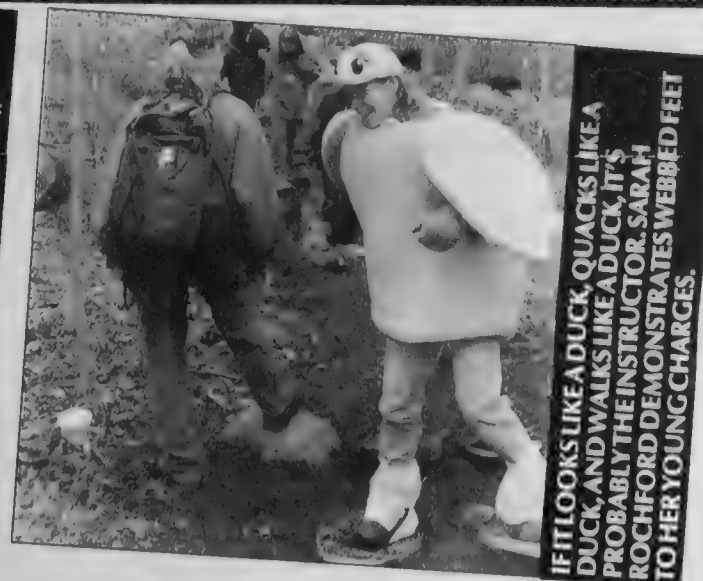

"This school is good at this," says Mowat. "Other teachers have done peer tutoring. There are all kinds of things like this happening in this school. [Principal] Gary [Brohman] really promotes it. We're able to do it because the principal and the board are really behind this kind of — almost communal — schooling. Education week this year is supposed to be about partnerships in education. Well, this is a true partnership."

TRAIL LEADER MARGARET TELJEUR, AN OAC ENGLISH STUDENT, TAKES ONE OF HER YOUNG CHARGES ASIDE TO WORK ON THE SCRIPT, IN AN EXERCISE IN WHICH WINDFALLS AND FOREST DISTURBANCES ARE EXPLAINED VIA A PLAY. MUCH OF THE COURSE MATERIAL IS PREPARED BY ENGLISH AND DRAMA STUDENTS.

Home and Garden tour organizing committee members Nora Snyder, Jeanne Anthon, Gail La Berge, Dianne Graham, and Pat Campbell

Minden Home and Garden Tour ready to go

Eight unique private homes in the Minden area will be thrown open for public viewing later this summer.

Which homes those will be isn't known yet. That's a secret.

The first annual Minden Home and Garden Tour is planned for July 13.

The committee is arranging for the eight homes to be opened to the curious as a way for people to promote understanding of local history, and to promote pride in the area.

Tickets to the event will also admit visitors to the Agnes Jamieson Gallery, and the Minden County Town Museum.

Proceeds from the event, which will be advertised in national magazines, will go to the Minden Hospital building fund.

Nora Snyder, proprietor of Minden House, a 130-year old Victorian home in which she now operates a bed and breakfast, is chair of the committee organizing the event.

Says Snyder, "There are a lot of places people don't know, even people around here. So this is about discovering what's here. Often people are surprised by what's here... It's not about pride, but taking ownership of our area. It's about feeling good about ourselves, feeling good about our secrets."

Organizers aren't divulging which homes are on the tour yet, for reasons of security and privacy.

They are, however, revealing that Minden House, built near the time of earliest European settlement in the area, will be one of those on the tour.

Says Snyder, "It's been part of Minden for a long, long time... It's built from stacked timber — pieces of wood stacked one on top of the other in a rather unique method. The stained glass over the transom in the door is the original stained glass; it's very old. There are interesting little alcoves built into the dining room.

I call them whimsical."

Though there are historical sites on the tour, there are other attractions besides, says Snyder.

"Each is a place that's interesting, and that's worth seeing, but isn't necessarily old."

Tickets for the day are $10 per person, and can be purchased at the Chamber of Commerce — phone (705) 286-1760, 1-800-461-7977 — or by writing to the Minden Home and Garden Tour, PO Box 413, Minden, ON, K0M 2K0. The tour is from 11 am to 6 pm, and one ticket admits visitors to all sites.

Activities from the internet

over the past two years.

TVO, the provincial educational television network, gives the Ontario Teacher's Award to recognize innovative teaching methods, creative program design, and the creative use of technology and community resources in the classroom.

One teacher across Ontario wins for each of three categories — in the junior, primary, and francophone divisions.

Newton was nominated by, among others, the board's superintendent of education Dale Robinson, who describes her as providing "outstanding leadership for students and teachers alike" in the IBM EduQuest pilot project being run in grades two and three throughout the board.

Newton has been in teaching 28 years now, all but two of those at Archie Stouffer. The EduQuest project — an integrated math, science and languages teaching program meant to integrate into the regular curriculum — is just the latest wrinkle in an old idea for her — she's been working with computers for years now.

Among her more notable innovations is the use of the internet for seeking out course materials and for research, and, at times, within the curriculum itself.

'Flat Stanley'

Newton's classroom is one of 60 some groups in schools across Canada, the United States — and even as far afield as Australia — to participate in the 'Flat Stanley Project', an unusual cooperative undertaking coordinated between the schools, through the net.

Explains Newton, "Flat Stanley is the story of a little boy, who one night when he was sleeping, the bulletin board fell on him. And when he woke up he was flat. But the nice thing about being flat is you can travel anywhere in the world in an envelope."

In the project, says Newton, classrooms at the schools involved in the project cut out their own Flat Stanleys — paper cutouts of a cheerful traveller — and mail them on 'exchange programs' to classes in other parts of the world. Those classrooms then create detailed diaries of Stanley's stay in their part of the world, and mail them and Stanley back. It's a way for the classrooms to get together, to learn a little about the world, and to work in some creativity on the way.

Though they send Stanley by conventional mail, says Newton, they coordinate the project with the other classrooms via the internet.

"And, she says, "email means we can check on Stanley, wherever he is. I can just drop an email message saying so and so wants to know how Stanley is doing, and they'll write back."

Along one wall of Newton's classroom are the Stanleys that have come back, complete with pictures of Stanley in Texas, Stanley in Australia, Stanley at schools around Ontario.

"This Stanley," says Newton, holding up one diary, "came from Hawaii. So we had to make a snowsuit for the winter."

"We wanted to come up with programming that would still be challenging, meet the needs of the common curriculum, and

"There are some kids who don't seem to learn any other way who really learn through computers."

yet not be repetitious," says Newton. "So I used the internet. I looked for projects on the internet that I could apply to the common curriculum to meet the needs. We've ended up this year doing a lot of activities that originated from the internet. And the one project is this Flat Stanley project."

In another project, her classroom got together with students from 50 other countries around the world and wrote the peace poem 'A Recipe for World Peace'.

Says Newton, "It was really nice, because the children got to share them with different countries, and they published them on the internet when we were done."

In her experience, says Newton, properly used, computers have a great deal to offer education. There were concerns from parents, of course, she says, that the use of computers would reduce the amount of handwriting practice the children would get, and she understands that. But the EduQuest program, she says, makes a point of including a variety of projects that require the children do some handwriting.

Says Newton, "Primary children are visual learners, and the computer is really visual. It's really exciting for the children, because they have no inhibitions at all. They just go in and work on it. It's a great learning tool. It's done a lot for kids."

"And there are some children for whom it's really the key. There are some kids who don't seem to learn any other way who really learn through computers... I have found that computers have made a tremendous difference in the classroom."

Besides Robinson, and among others, Newton was nominated by her daughter Louise, and by Mary Wallace, whose children she has taught.

Her fellow teachers also seem to feel the award is richly deserved. Said one, "In my opinion Helen Newton could have won this award 20 years ago, with or without computers... In my opinion she's always been qualified for this award."

Interactive theatre deals with alcohol, drug use

Megan (Tanya Cowen) offers Allan (Jeremy Scheffee) a cigarette.

"I saw you after that game you guys lost," she says to Scheffee's character, the high school football captain. "You looked real tense. Smoke one of these and that just goes away."

He hesitates, apparently undecided.

They freeze, and narrator Bob Sisson wades into the audience, 12 through 14 year old children from Archie Stouffer Elementary School.

"Now," he says, "Allan has a choice to make here. You make the decision. What should he do? Should he smoke it?"

One stands up, "Yeah," he says, "Smoke it. Go for it."

The audience giggles.

"Okay," says Sisson, "Let's see what happens."

He turns to Scheffee. "Allan, smoke the cigarette."

The event is a play on addiction — tobacco, alcohol and marijuana use, specifically — aimed at children. Written and performed by Michele Shapiera's grade twelve drama class, the play has a twist. The audience gets involved.

At specific points in the play, the critical points where the characters yield or do not yield to peer pressure, the action stops, and the audience is asked to make the decision. What happens from there on depends on what the audience decides.

Narrator Bob Sisson, with audience. Audience members make decisions at key points in the play.

There are three scenarios — dealing with tobacco, alcohol, and marijuana, respectively, with two endings for each scenario, depending on the audience's choice.

Says Shapiera, "Whatever choice is made by the audience determines the one they play. They can show the other one after. The whole focus is supposed to be choice making in peer pressure situations dealing with drugs."

The idea for a play on addiction came from Michele Bromley, of FourCAST Addiction Services, an addiction counselling centre. The Children's health workshop

SIRCH is organizing two presentations by an authority on children's health, at the end of this month.

Dr. Dan Offord of McMaster university will be speaking on Healthy Children in Changing Times.

Offord is described by promotional material as "an inspiring, dynamic and entertaining speaker who has a wealth of knowledge and experience on children's health."

Offord will speak to the questions: "Why must we change? Why should we care? What can be done?" as people of the community, in order to make sure that children have the best chance to grow up physically, mentally, and emotionally healthy.

There will be two presentations, both open to anyone who would like to attend. One is on Friday, May 31 at 1:00 pm to 4:30 pm at the Minden Community Centre. The second is on Saturday, June 1 at 1:00 pm to 4:30 pm at J.D. Hodgson School in Haliburton.

The registration cost of $20.00 includes refreshments. Please register by May 15. Subsidies are being made available to parents who would otherwise be unable to attend.

interactive concept, the sets, the characters, and the script, however, came out of the heads of the class itself. And that, says Shapiera, coupled with the students' intent to keep the writing unpretentious, may make for a more convincing presentation.

Says Shapiera, "They came up with the concept. And to my mind that makes it a lot more realistic for the kids. It's not a play that's preaching about things. It's written by kids for kids, and it's role modelling for kids."

"They were really thoughtful in the writing of it to make it not sound preachy, but to get the facts across. And it's a hard thing for them to do, because they're caught up in the middle of it. But I think they got a lot from it."

The audiences, she says, seem to have responded pretty well.

Says Shapiera, "We left out the grade eights on purpose because we didn't want them to intimidate the other kids. The grade sevens were a little shy, strangely enough, but the fives and sixes just asked tonnes of questions. They were right into it."

Cast and crew are Cowen, Scheffee, Sisson,

Theresa Jago, Wayne Baumhour, Sara Levis, Chris Miniaci, Mike Reid, Tim Keefer, Kendra Anderson, Casey Bull, and Cassie Weyrich.

The play was performed at Archie Stouffer, at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School in Haliburton, and at Wilberforce Elementary School.

REMEMBER-WHEN YOU THINK OF R & R - THINK OF ROBERT OF RE/MAX!

Cat owners cautioned about rabies threat

May is Rabies Awareness Month, a comprehensive government and community partnership to educate Ontarians about the threat of rabies.

Co-sponsors of the program include the Ontario Ministries of Natural Resources (MNR), Health, and Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, as well as Agriculture and agri-food Canada, the Ontario Veterinary Medical Association and the Six Nations of the Grand River.

"The fight against rabies is important," said Chris Hodgson, Ontario's Minister of Natural Resources. "We must take every precaution to ensure that all strains of rabies will eventually be controlled."

This year's rabies awareness program focuses on cats and how they can spread rabies to humans. During May, local Community Contingency Planning Teams will be organizing activities to educate the public on rabies and rabies prevention.

The best protection against rabies is for people to ensure their pets are vaccinated and kept away from stray domestic or wild animals. If they suspect that they, or their pets, may have come into contact with a rabid animal, they should call their doctor or veterinarian immediately.

Cats left outside, especially at night may come into contact with foxes and other wild animals such as raccoons. Rabies experts suggest keeping cats indoors, or on a leash, especially in the evening. Cats and dogs should also wear a collar which properly identifies their owner.

There is an ongoing concern that raccoon rabies — which has been identified on the New York State side of the Niagara River, and within 10 km of the St. Lawrence river near Gananoque — may enter Ontario.

A raccoon immunization program called Trap-Vaccinate-Release (TVR), has created a buffer zone against raccoon rabies in that portion of Ontario between the Niagara River and the Welland Canal. Additional buffer zones have also been created at bridges along the Ontario side of the St. Lawrence River, where in-fectured Raccoons could enter from New York State.

Through this program, raccoons are live-trapped, vaccinated, ear-tagged and released. MNR hopes that the TVR program will contain or slow the spread of raccoon rabies.

MNR's Rabies Research Unit has also developed a contingency plan on how any potential spread of raccoon rabies will be contained in areas where the animals have not been vaccinated. This could occur where raccoons with rabies enter Ontario as "stowaways", on transport trucks, recreational vehicles or boats.

The Ministry of Natural Resources is also continuing its work on eliminating fox rabies in Ontario. Since 1989, aerial baiting programs have taken place throughout the province and, by 2001, MNR expects to have eliminated fox rabies in Ontario.

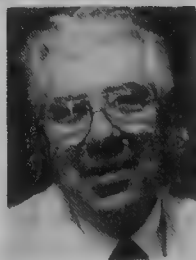

For more information on rabies, please call toll-free at 1-800-461-2036 (general line). The number for persons with impaired hearing is 1-800-387-5559.

Census tracks community needs

Every five years, from Newfoundland to British Columbia, everyone participates in the largest and most comprehensive survey of Canadian life.

May 14, 1996 is Census Day in Canada.

There were over 14,000 people in your county in 1991. Who were your neighbours? They were almost evenly split between women and men — the bulk of them, 31 percent, falling between 20 and 45 years of age. Children (19 years and under) made up 24 per cent of the population while senior citizens accounted for 20 per cent of the total.

Back in 1991, the traditional family structure was prevalent among the residents of Haliburton County. Of the over 4,400 families in your community, 84 percent consisted of legally married couples. The other 16 per cent were a mixture of common-law and single parent arrangements. Most of the single parent families (79 per cent) were headed by women.

If you lived here 5 years ago, there's a good chance you owned your home. The majority of private dwellings in 1991 were owned (84 per cent) and not rented. This contrasts with the same figure for all Ontario. Only 64 per cent of Ontario residents owned their own homes in 1991.

It's been almost five years and your community is five years older. That's five years of change; births, deaths, marriages, divorces, and neighbours moving in and out. Ask yourself "Does my neighbourhood look the same as it did in 1991?"

A changing population has changing needs. An accurate count of Haliburton County's population helps plan basic services like buses and fire stations and reveals additional community needs such as senior citizen homes and schools.

The 1996 Census of Population is ready to snap a new portrait of Haliburton County. Whether it's a new bus route or a new school, the Census is the best source of information for your governments and business community to identify your neighbourhood's evolving needs.

Prizes for Sneaker Day this year

Submitted

Participants in this year's Sneaker Day (this Friday) could walk themselves into an all-expense paid vacation to Jasper or Banff.

Everyone who walks this year — regardless of distance — gets his/her name entered in a local prize draw, and in provincial and national draws.

The event is organized strictly to promote walking for health. There is no fundraising nor cost for participating.

The local draw is for a SummerActive T shirt.

All tickets will then be sent to Toronto where another draw will be held. Prizes will be awarded to walkers across the province.

Finally, the tickets will be sent to Ottawa for a prize worth approximately $5000. The winner, plus a partner, will choose one of four trips.

They are a five day bicycle tour to Banff and Jasper, a six day hiking trip in Banff and Soho, a five day bicycle jaunt through Quebec's Eastern Townships, or a six day hiking trip to Kejimikujik National Park in Nova Scotia. All expenses are covered, including $250 spending money.

The prizes were donated by the Dairy Farmers of Canada.

Tickets will be filled out at the gazebo by the bridge, where the walk starts.

Walkers proceed at their own pace to the end of Orde St. on the north side of the river, then return by the same route along the river.

There are no time goals nor rewards for placing. Organizers stress that the event is not a race.

The distance is slightly less than three kilometres.

The event starts at 11:00 am.

CHANGES

by Florence Robinson

"It's great to have hydro and sure hope it lasts,
I often think of how things were in the past.
Now we have furnaces to keep us warm,
But our men used to chop wood with a strong right arm.
We used to read good books by candle or oil lit lamps
And no one then complained about the price of stamps.
Our neighbours used to visit us, we didn't have TV
And now when we sit watching it how much good do we see?
We had no fridge to keep food cool and it is true to tell
That about 50 years ago we kept ours down the well.
So sometimes we must feel thankful that the other days are gone
And thank the Lord and our hydro man each time the furnace comes back on".

Things to remember this week:

- 1) Library meeting May 13, 10 am;
- 2) Census day May 14 - count yourself in and mail the census out;
- 3) Asthma info meeting at ASES May 15, 7:30 p.m.;
- 4) Minden Srs. Shuffleboard registration May 15, 2-4 pm. This year register at the Lawn Bowling Club. All seniors 55+ welcome. Refreshments served.
- 5) "New Beginnings" group bereavement discussion May 16, 2 pm in the United Church basement on Newcastle St;
- 6) Educational conference regarding serious mental illness in Haliburton County May 16, 8 pm at the Pinestone Inn.
- 7) Sneaker Day walk in Minden, Friday May 17 from 11 am to 1 pm.

My wife constantly reminds me that the opinions of the man of the house are not necessarily those of management.

The slip of the pen award goes to the article mentioned last week about line dancing held Tuesdays in St. Paul's, Anglican that is.

This week, Superior Propane are giving special attention to LITERACY. The company is donating $1 to the local literacy chapter for each BBQ tank filled with propane. So, what are you waiting for?

Last week, special attention was given to cleaning up the neighbourhood. You remember, it was called "Pitch-In". Thanks to the community for helping but I wish Council would distribute about another two dozen waste receptacles along and adjacent to Bobcaygeon Road. Also, it sure would be nice if the owners of the vacant main street lots would pick up the garbage. Tourists are coming and appearances mean everything.

I saw Bradley from the IGA hard at work cleaning up all the garbage in front of their store so, Brad, you win the customer service award for this week.

Kinmount Legion is delighted to announce that Terry Martin won the 50-50 draw. They also announced the winners of the inter-branch dart tournament. Bobcaygeon won first place in the team and doubles categories. Kinmount captured high score and came first in the singles category and second in the doubles. Fenelon Falls was second in the singles and team categories. They are oh so glad to see Arthur Owens home from the Hospital.

The U.C.W. is providing a hot and cold buffet supper on Saturday, May 18 4:30-7:00 p.m. in the Kinmount Legion, Branch 441. Sounds delicious.

Also on Saturday, May 18, the Minden Bible Church is celebrating its 40th anniversary by hosting a pot luck supper and musicale starting at 6:15 p.m.

Then on Sunday, May 19 an invitation is extended to everyone to come and enjoy anniversary services with special music at 10:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. Rev. Grover Crosby at the pulpit.

The County Town Museum and Pioneer Centre is still looking for donations for their yard sale. Remember to call Lee after 9:00 a.m. with your donations (286-1682).

The Museum is also in need of items for children's crafts - buttons, ribbons, lace, needles, crochet hooks, dried flowers, baby food jars, old greeting cards, calendars, fabric paint, brushes, scissors, just about anything that could be used for crafts. Drop off your items, Fridays or Saturdays from 10-4 starting May 13 through to Thanksgiving. Questions, call Marvella 489-2973.

Do you have an art or craft that you would like to demonstrate at the County Town Museum and Pioneer Centre? The Museum is looking for volunteers to give an hour or two of their time. Please call Marvella at 489-2973.

Heartfelt sympathy to the family and friends of Percy Sherman who passed away recently.

S.I.R.C.H. Community Hospice for Haliburton County is offering a rewarding and challenging opportunity to volunteers interested in helping people that are facing a life threatening illness. Volunteers will provide non-medical support such as listening, reading aloud, comforting, transportation, shopping etc. If you would like to help, call Dorothy Owens at 457-1742 ext.22. Please focus on doing whatever you can and call soon.

If you like to play cards there's a lot to choose from in the community.

• St. Paul's Friendship Club, euchre at 1:30 p.m. Mondays.

• Club 35 (9 km N. Carnarvon), euchre, 7:30 p.m. Mondays. No partners needed. Last week Olive Jones and Bob Lewis had the high scores and Cliff Woolner won the 50-50 draw. Their next "wheels-to-meals" dinner is noon Tuesday May 21-Stanhope Library, contract bridge, 1 p.m. Tuesdays. No partners needed. Last week Helen Cassidy was first. Earl Hayne should have won the lucky draw but he didn't stick around, so it went to Betty Skinner.

• Minden Legion, seniors bid euchre, 1:30 p.m. Tuesdays. Last week Margaret Fletcher was first and the hidden score of 110 went to Jack Chilton.

• Lochlin/Gelert Community Centres, euchre 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays.

• Stanhope Firehall, bid euchre, 7 p.m. Wednesdays. Last week the top scores were won by Bill Menard, 328 and Brian Henderson, 293.

• Moore Falls Noble Motel, euchre 7:30 p.m. Wednesdays. Last week Ida Young, and Leslie Francis were high winners and Harry Stuart most lone hands.

• Minden Legion, euchre 7:15 p.m. Thursdays. On May 2, Pat Rousselle and Gala Stamp had the high scores while Marg McAfee held the other.

Health Corner

(Continued from last week): In the past 15 years the prevalence of obesity has grown by more than 50% in Canadian children aged 6 to 11 years and by 40% in those aged 12 to 17. A stunning number of up to 90% of overweight youngsters become obese adults who, naturally, are at a high risk of developing heart disease and diabetes. Less than 2% of the population gets enough cardiovascular exercise during their workday to stay in shape. These are facts and stats but something can be done about it through sensible eating and even moderate exercise. But you have to make a concentrated effort and what better way to start than by joining the Sneaker Day walk this Friday. Work up to 30 minutes increasing the briskness over time. If you can do more all the better. You owe it to yourself and your family.

CARDS OF THANKS

A sincere and heartfelt thank you to all those who assisted at Alex and Barry's accident. The people who helped at the scene, the Minden and Haliburton ambulance staff, to the nurses at the hospital and Dr. Fiddler who provided the best care that any one could ever wish for. It becomes very evident that we must expend every effort we can to ensure that we maintain a 24 hour emergency facility in Minden. Thanks to the Minden O.P.P., those who brought gifts of food and toys, to all of those concerned who telephoned and sent cards and offered help, a heartfelt thank you. Thanks to our staff and friends who took over phones and doors at the funeral home, and just everyone who gave in so many ways, we feel we can never repay all you have done for us. It is just so great to live in this community and have the overwhelming support. To the clergy for their prayers, thank you. If we haven't mentioned your name please know that your acts of kindness and concern have not been overlooked and will not be forgotten. Both during the period after Barry and Alex's accident and also during the loss of Gordon's mother, the Monk family is very proud to be part of this community. God Bless you all.
Gordon & Donna Monk

...ideas are funny little things...they won't work unless you do.

CARDS OF THANKS

George and Patricia Grant wish to thank their family, relatives and friends for all their help in making their 50th anniversary such a great success. For gifts and food donations for the food bank on their behalf thank you so very much.
Thanks, Heather Hope.

We would like to thank everyone for the wonderful retirement party. It did our hearts good to see such a great turnout. The organizers did a super job! We had a fabulous time!! Love and warmest thanks.
Mike & Sandra

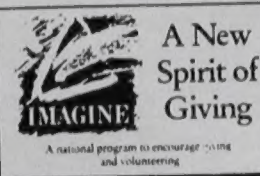

I wish to express heartfelt thanks to the Doctors and nurses of Haliburton and Ross Memorial hospitals during Jean's recent illness. Also the excellent service of the VON nurses was much appreciated. Thanks, too, to Gordon Monk and his staff for sensitive and expert attention for Jean's funeral. Special thanks to Jan Shipley for her warm friendship and loving care.
